ADELAIDE INSTITUTE

PO Box 3300 Adelaide 5067 Australia

Mob: 61+401692057

Email: info@adelaideinstitute.org
Web: http://www.adelaideinstitute.org

Online ISSN 1440-9828

August 2014 No 796

...note the twist in reporting - it's Hamas' own rockets that's causing Palestinian deaths...

Like the Algemeiner on Facebook for instant News, Commentary, Analysis, Blogs, Invitations to events and special offers.

Join the conversation.

Kent State Professor Calls for Jihad Against Israel

AUGUST 10, 2014 12:15 AM

An IDF diagram showing how 4 rockets were fired by Hamas, but one went out to sea, one reached Israel and two hit Gaza's Shati and Al-Shifa Hospital.

Photo: IDF / Twitter.

A Kent State University associate professor of history is standing by his call for "jihad" against Israel, and his statement that Israel is "a regime that is the spiritual heir to Nazism."

In an "open letter" to "academic friends of Israel," Julio Pino accuses the pro-Israel academic community of being "directly responsible for the murder of over 1,400 Palestinian children, women and elderly civilians."

In his statement that quotes former Cuban dictator Fidel Castro and compares the academics to alleged Nazi collaborator and philosopher Martin Heidegger, Pino writes "Your names are scrawled on every bullet fired, bomb dropped, body buried and burnt forehead in Gaza. May your names become a curse word on the lips of every justice-loving person on earth, along with 'Obama' and 'Netanyahu.'"

On Tuesday, the Simon Wiesenthal Center sent a letter to Kent State University, a public university that benefits from more than $137 million in state appropriations, asking that they denounce the professor:

"We urge you to condemn the recent, highly offensive and blatantly anti-Semitic remarks of Julio Pino – an Associate Professor of History at your university," the organization wrote to Kent State University President Beverly Warren.

"Kent State is known for its proud legacy of Jewish studies, scholarship, and life; yet, when the state of Israel defends herself against thousands of rockets targeting Israel's heartland launched by terrorist Hamas and a newly discovered underground of terrorist tunnels, Pino victimizes other academics with his vile propaganda, espousing terror and tarnishing Kent State's good name while targeting Jewish and pro-Israel members of the campus community. We strongly urge you to unequivocally denounce and repudiate Pino's anti-Semitic diatribe. Such hate speech left unchallenged will only serve to create a hostile environment for Jews and others at Kent State," the Center wrote.

The university agreed with the Wiesenthal Center, releasing a statement that said, "We condemn the professor's statement as reprehensible and irresponsible. At Kent State, we value collegiality and mutual respect. Assailing the public with broad statements of culpability violates these principles."

But this is not the first time that Pino has expressed views critical of Israel, and gone to egregious lengths to express them.

A report by the Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America says Pinto interrupted a studentrun event on campus in 2011 featuring Arab-Israeli diplomat Ishmael Khaldi. According to the Kent State student paper:

Standing at the back of the auditorium, Pino asked Khaldi how he and his government could justify providing aid to countries like Turkey with blood money that came from the deaths of Palestinian children and babies. The crowd fell into an awkward silence as the two continued to exchange words from across the auditorium.

"It is not respectful to me here," Khaldi said.

Pino responded by saying "your government killed people" and claimed Khaldi was not being respectful to

"I do respect you, but you are wrong," Khaldi said. "It's a lie."

The exchange ended as Pino stormed out of the auditorium shouting "Death to Israel!"

CAMERA also noted that "In 2002, Pino published a eulogy in the campus paper praising Palestinian terrorist Ayat al-Akras, who murdered two Israelis, Rachel Levy and Chaim Smadar," and that "Pino has been accused of having ties to terrorists and had his home raided in 2009 by the U.S. Secret Service."

Pino told Watchdog.org in an email that he stands by "every word of my original statement."

"Israeli racism and apartheid must be opposed by all those who treasure justice, but American academics have a special obligation to speak out, in my opinion, given that the U.S. government endorses and arms the Zionist regime and no politician dares to expose the ugly truth of the Gaza massacre," he said. "As for 'intimidating the students,' truth is like the lance of Achilles; it cures the very wounds it causes."

The university has not said if they intend to take further action against Pino.

This article was originally published by Watchdog.org

17 COMMENTS

Richard Sherman

August 2014 6:05 am

Pino is a typical academic...99% of them are antisemitic, especially the antisemitic Jews like Gertrude Stein..Pino is just like Heiddegger..they both are raving antisemites...Of course Heiddegger was fascinated by the "beauty" of Hitler's fingers...What part of Hitler fascinates Pino?

Fredrick Toben

August 2014 11. 5:27 am

Mr Sherman talks nonsense when he uses the term "antisemite" because it explains nothing but only indicates how morally and intellectually bankrupt Mr Sherman really is. Think of the Palestinian ethnic cleansing that is going on now, quite systematically and according to plan so that Eretz Israel can emerge. If Mr Sherman pretends this is not the plan, then he would already be weary of the sophistry that has been going on since even before 1948.

And belling the cat for that message to reach the world is a moral imperative - at least that is the moral duty of those who can see clearly what is happening in the Middle East. Then remember that all Freemasons once a month express their desire of assisting in re-building King Solomon's Temple! So, please don't deflect from the real issue, and I suppose Mr Sherman would also label Heidegger's expressed profound truism an antisemitic act:

>>The Jews, with their marked gift for calculating, live, already for the longest time, according to the principle of race, which is why they are resisting its consistent application with utmost violence. < Don't only blame the Jews, also blame those that bend to their pressure!<<

Your comment is awaiting moderation.

http://www.algemeiner.com/2014/08/10/kent-stateprofessor-calls-for-jihad-against-israel/#comment-4410898

The HOLOCAUST is still high drama in New York!

THEATER | THEATER REVIEW

Recounting a Tragic Past Through the Eyes of Survivors 'The Good and the True' Recounts the Holocaust

By ALEXIS SOLOSKI AUG. 3, 2014

Milos Dobry and Hana Pravda have apparently never met. Possibly Milos saw one of Hana's early films, like "Marijka the Unfaithful." Maybe she strolled past a Prague soccer field where Milos made save after save at goal. Or maybe, a few years later — now wretched, terrified, half-starved — they might have crossed paths at Auschwitz.

The Czech director Daniel Hrbek has twinned their stories in "The Good and the True," at the DR2 Theater, a documentary drama assembled from testimony by Ms. Pravda, who died in 2008, and Mr. Dobry, who died in 2012. Here, little unites the lives of the actress Hana (Hannah D. Scott) and the athlete Milos (Saul Reichlin) except their Jewry and the horrors they suffered and witnessed.

This brisk 70-minute drama begins with a few particulars of birth and upbringing, but almost immediately it shifts to the camps. At Terezin, the socalled model ghetto, there's fear, abuse and privation, but also soccer and amateur theatrics. Predictably the story turns far grimmer as the setting shifts to Auschwitz. Milos recalls his arrival: "The doors crashed open. People fell and jumped from the train in the dark, gasping for air. Then searchlights, the dogs and the stamping of boots of the SS men, marching toward us." The intertwined monologues don't enhance or refract each other as much as you might wish, but they're both compelling. Specifics give the story its power and its horror: the size of the boots that pinch Milos's feet so badly that his toes start to fester, the frozen cabbages that Hana and other prisoners fight over during a forced march, the tulip bulbs that Milos eats, having mistaken them for onions.

Ms. Scott is a late addition to the cast, recruited when a visa snag delayed the British actress Isobel Pravda, Hana Pravda's granddaughter. Ms. Scott learned the role in just a few days and may well grow into it, given time. Mr. Reichlin, who has played the part before, lends a chilling humor to Milos's plight.

Saul Reichlin in "The Good and the True." CreditJeremy Daniel

There are a few directorial missteps — some muddled lighting cues, an attempt to render the space beneath the piano as a miniature gas chamber — but Mr. Hrbek encourages his actors to treat the material with appropriate gravity and fervor. And given the facts of each story, it is remarkable that Mr. Dobry and Ms. Pravda lived to offer their testimony at all. "You tell yourself: You will survive, you will survive," Hana says, recalling her first days in Terezin. "How could we have been so naïve?"

"The Good and the True" continues through Sept. 14 at the DR2 Theater, 101 East 15th Street, Manhattan; 212-239-6200, goodandtrue.co.uk. http://www.nytimes.com/2014/08/04/theater/the-goodandthetruerecountstheholocaust.html?nlid=53250 2&src=recpb& r=1

Free-speech phobics cling on

Nick Cater, Columnist, Sydney, THE AUSTRALIAN, AUGUST 12, 2014 12:00AM

https://plus.google.com/107028210610833732443

Illustration: Eric Lobbecke Source: Supplied

IF Andrew Bolt's show trial was supposed to teach him a lesson it plainly didn't work, judging from the tone of his questions to Labor's Richard Marles on Sunday morning.

The 21 people jailed for terrorism-related offences, Bolt claimed were "all Muslim".

Marles was not prepared to let that one slip.

"You seem to be drawing a distinction between, in the question you ask, between Christian Australians and Islamic Australians," he said. "If we see this kind of debate go down a path which seeks to vilify people of that faith, it makes their liberties, and their rights to enjoy their life in their country — our country — much more difficult. So I think we need to be careful, then, about how we conduct this debate ... Let's get the basics right before we start walking down unsettling paths."

Smug arguments like this might once have gone unnoticed, but with the head-hacking in the caliphate showing little sign of abating, a quaint discussion about the avoidance of "unsettling paths" seems to miss the point.

There are no easy solutions to home-grown Islamist terrorism or to the community tension it provokes, but discouraging the use of the I-word won't make it go away.

The obsession with the avoidance of "inappropriate" language, even at the expense of open debate about matters of national importance, is an unfortunate ingrained habit.

The reaction to the government's modest amendments to the Racial Discrimination Act shows that the onus of proof now rests upon those who would justify free speech, not upon those who would restrict it.

George Brandis's Freedom of Speech Bill may not have received the reception he might have hoped for, but it has at least flushed out the true conservative forces in Australia and exposed the paucity of their arguments.

"The FS Bill has been used as political tool," wrote the ACTU in its submission to the Attorney-General, "to popularise the concept of freedom of speech in Australia."

It might surprise the ACTU to learn that free speech is, and always has been, popular among Australians, a people with a hard-won reputation for speaking their minds.

It is a country of "informality, bloody-mindedness, individualism, self-reliance", wrote the British politician Daniel Hannan recently. "Here, in short, is Mill's libertarian philosophy made flesh."

Yet most of the thousands of submissions the Attorney-General received favoured the status quo, arguing that restrictions on free speech were less onerous than the risk of giving offence.

Who can tell whether the views of, say, the West Australian Somali Cultural Awareness Association were broadly in line with those of the public? Ditto the views of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Reference Group, the Secretariat of National Aboriginal and Islander Child Care, the Australian Tamil Congress, the Australian Lawyers Alliance, Aboriginal Legal Service of WA (Inc), the Muslim Legal Network, the WA Muslim Lawyers Association and many, many more.

Race Discrimination Commissioner Tim Soutphommasane summed it up — sort of — in last Wednesday's The Canberra Times: "The members of 'Team Australia' have said unambiguously that the act should stay as it is." Soutphommasane's Team Australia should not be confused with that of Tony Abbott, who used the term last week to describe the broad national consensus on matters of national security.

The Race Discrimination Commissioner, on the other hand, employs Team Australia as a euphemism for the new establishment, the enforcers of political correctness who remain firmly in control of most of Australia's cultural institutions. On Thursday he told readers of The Age that the objections had "not just come from multicultural and Aboriginal communities".

"The legal profession, human rights experts, psychologists and public health professionals have all objected to weakening laws against racial vilification."

Indeed, we had rather expected they would. The repeal of 18C was a disruption to the grievance industry's business model that they could not countenance. Its flaws are self-evident, but like a diseased tree in a Tasmanian forest, its felling was unimaginable.

These are Australia's true conservatives, the ones defending the cultural institutions they have either taken over or created in the 50 years since Donald Horne wrote The Lucky Country. Horne's list of special interest groups is relatively short: the wheat, sugar and wool lobbies, the churches, the RSL, the four newspaper groups, BHP, the Chamber of Manufacturers and the unions in the Labor Party.

Today's list would be many times longer, but like the reactionaries in 1964, their grip on the levers of cultural power is less secure than they imagine. There is precious little support for their worn-out causes outside of the beret-wearing zone.

The survival of clause 18C will ultimately prove a hollow victory. The chances of its illiberal provisions being exploited again in a case like the one brought against Bolt are practically zero.

The toxic influence of the Bolt case on the climate of public debate is recognised as a price too high to pay by the wiser heads on both sides of the cultural divide.

The case started a backlash that destroyed the Gillard government's restrictive anti-discrimination legislation and gave the Abbott government the motivation to reshape the Human Rights Commission. Tim Wilson's appointment with special responsibilities for free speech has noticeably shifted the body's focus.

Brandis, it should be noted, played a key part in both those achievements, a fact that should not be forgotten, despite the defeat of his Freedom of Speech Bill.

In the end, the real issue is not 18C but the illiberal climate that encouraged the complainants in the Bolt case to pursue their audacious case.

The pain of dashed expectations is acute for the many who wanted 18C off the statute books. Yet for the first time in decades the rights industry is fighting to hold its ground rather than planning its next grand adventure.

http://www.theaustralian.com.au/opinion/columnists/freespeechphobicsclingon/storyfnhulhjj1227020970827

The Socialist Nazi Sympathizing Jew Who Led the Left's War on Israel August 9, 2014 by Daniel Greenfield

I wrote about Bruno Kreisky last year in the context of discussing Austria's Islamization. There's no doubt that Kreisky was a real demented piece of work, on a par with Norman Finkelstein or M.J. Rosenberg.

Austria's Socialist Chancellor, Bruno Kreisky, despite being of Jewish ancestry, was fond of Muslim terrorists and Nazis. He had a habit of filling his cabinet with former Nazis while comparing Zionism to Nazism. His political success rested on a welfare state built with Soviet money funneled through commercial orders and turning a blind eye to terrorist attacks carried out with Soviet and Polish machine guns was part of the price.

Even though the two terrorists had shouted, "PLO", Kreisky announced, "I am firmly convinced that the attackers had nothing to do with the PLO," Instead he suggested that they had been out to sabotage "Palestinian interests." During an interview, he offered that "the bad, unqualified treatment of Palestinians in Israel is one of the causes for these extreme actions."

Joshua Muravchik has a much more extended write-up of that demented twisted creature whom he credits as "The Jew Who Turned the Left Against Israel". I don't think that's a really accurate headline, as the core left was always anti-Zionist and anti-Semitic, long before Kreisky, but like the Finkelsteins and Rosenbergs, he was there to make the existing hatreds of the left seem "Kosher" again after the Holocaust.

The left's support for Israel was a very temporary phenomenon that came about largely due to the political situation in Europe and as an early anti-colonialist opportunity. In a few cases bonds had been forged through the mutual resistance against the Nazis.

Kreisky however was a big fan of Nazis.

This framework shaped his attitude toward his Nazi fellowprisoners when, in the mid 1930s, he served time for subversive activities under the authoritarian regime of Kurt Schuschnigg, which repressed challenges to the Austrian state from radicals, left and right. Kreisky's biographer, H. Pierre Secher, writes that political discourse among these factions was "rarely . . . hostile." On the contrary:

There was a well-founded solidarity among the political [prisoners], directed against the despised "cleric-fascist" government. ... Ideologically, the distinction between "Sozis" [Socialists and] Commies on the one hand and Nazis on the other, was probably only the internationalism of the Marxists and the nationalism of the Nazis. In every other respect they agreed on the evils of capitalism. Even the primary connection by the Nazis of capitalism with the Jews did not necessarily encounter heated critical opposition from the Socialists.

Released by the Austrian authorities, Kreisky was arrested again after the Nazi takeover. He then sent an audacious letter to the Gestapo, somehow supposing that its officers would harbor sympathy for him. He wrote:

I [have] decided to direct my request directly to the Gestapo since I believe that organization now consists largely of former illegals; I am prepared to provide you any time with the names of currently prominent, well-known members of the NSDAP [Nazi Party] who can testify that during my time as [a] prisoner I have always shown solidarity toward my National Socialist prison mates.

It is possible to understand why in the 1930s Kreisky, like many other Socialists who were steeped in Marxism and viewed capitalists as the true enemies, might have seen Nazis as merely misguided revolutionaries. Back then, it was hard to know what exactly to make of Hitlerian rhetoric. But it is much harder to fathom how Kreisky could have clung to such a view after the Holocaust since most of his immediate relatives had been murdered in it. Yet he did.

It's not really hard to fathom though because Kreisky hated Jews and, like most hard core leftist Jews, liked seeing them murdered. It's what the USSR's purges of Jews through the Jewish Section aka the Yevsektsia was built on.

Leftists are not Jews. They have always been the murderers of Jews. Their current collaboration with Hamas is nothing new. Long before them, Bruno Kreisky was a Nazi collaborator.

Kreisky's 1970 cabinet appointments sparked contention when the famous Austrian Nazi-hunter, Simon Wiesenthal, revealed that no fewer than four of the eleven ministers were former Nazis. Kreisky replied that no one, including those who had been Nazis, should be condemned for past political positions unless he or she could be shown to have committed a crime. He lashed out furiously at Wiesenthal calling him a "Jewish fascist."

This is typical of the demented hypocrisy of the left, which allies with actual fascists, while calling its critics, "Fascists."

In 1979, Kreisky took a further step, hosting Arafat in Vienna for talks with himself and West German Chancellor Willy Brandt on behalf of the Socialist International. The three leaders issued a joint communiqué blasting Israel, and at a concluding press conference, Kreisky likened the Palestinians' situation to his own Swedish exile during World War Two, thereby, as Carl Gershman, the U.S. representative to the International, put it, embracing the PLO's claim, that its "campaign against Israel [was] analogous to the European resistance against the Nazis."

Whom Kreisky actually liked quite a bit. The Nazis that is.

Bruno Kreisky's twisted brain isn't that unusual. You can throw a rock at a JVP rally and come up with a dozen equally demented creatures. This is the mindset behind the persons of Jewish origin in the anti-Israel movement.

Daniel Greenfield, a Shillman Journalism Fellow at the Freedom Center, is a New York writer focusing on radical Islam. He is completing a book on the international challenges America faces in the 21st century.

FToben • 5 minutes ago

Hold on, this is waiting to be approved by FrontPage Magazine.

The author of this diatribe rests his argument on a false premise that German philosopher Martin Heidegger spelled out so clearly:

The Jews, with their marked gift for calculating, live, already for the longest time, according to the principle of race, which is why they are resisting its consistent application with utmost violence.

Once this basic truth is accepted, then the power of such words as "antisemite", "Holocaust denier", "racist", "Nazi", etc. is explained as shields/weapons with which to engage in the timeless battle-of-the-wills where TRUTH has no home, only basic sense gratification that then slips into hedonism-nihilism.'

The author's use of the term "demented" tells me more about the author's mindset - and that's very sad indeed.

I formulated a maxim for this state of affairs: 'Don't only blame the Jews, also blame those that bend to Jewish pressure'.

In this way we get away from scapegoating anyone and find the truth of a contentious matter.

The other day in Australia we had PM Tony Abbott terminate the plan to eliminate Section 18C of the Racial Discrimination Act, perhaps hoping to turn it into a kind of blasphemy law in disguise. After all it protected Jews from so-called Holocaust deniers.

Now, the question is why did Tony Abbott bend to Jewish pressure? Was it Jewish pressure that caused him to abandon his plans to eliminate Section 18C?

Yes, it was - and for once Jewish hubris tells us so - at:

Australian Jews block change in local race-hate laws –

http://www.timesofisrael.com/australian-jews-block-change-in-local-race-hate-laws/

Then recently we had Sydney Morning Herald columnist Mike Carlton label someone a "Jewish bigot", which some Jews in Australia regarded as an antisemitic slur! Carlton was offered a suspension and so he resigned instead.

Years ago we had a prominent media personality, Terry Lane, do this willingly over the Israel-Palestine conflict, and this for me was a sad thing because it re-confirmed my maxim that blanked condemning any group of individuals is indicative of how morally and intellectually bankrupt our society has become:

Here is Terry Lane's letter:

POWERFUL WORDS

I have said publicly that I will never write or speak on the subject of Israel or Palestine ever again. Here is why.

The Zionist lobby in this country is malicious, implacable, mendacious and dangerous. They have caused me a great deal of lost sleep – and in the end my insomnia has not contributed anything to the resolution of the conflict over Palestine. I might as well keep my mouth shut and get some sleep. What's more, once the expression anti-Semite hits the air, or heaven forefend, the sacred formula six million is uttered, then I know from bitter experience that there is not one manager or editor in the country who will defend an underling. We are thrown to the jackals.

In the end the truly tolerant have no defence against intolerance. I surrender. To the Zionists I say: You win. To the Palestinians: Forgive my cowardice.

Terry Lane, ABC broadcaster and journalist

The Australian Jewish New, 4 December 1992

http://www.frontpagemag.com/2014/dgreenfield/the-socialist-nazi-sympathizing-jew-who-led-the-lefts-war-on-israel/

Belgian politician sorry for Holocaust comment

Hassan Aarab offers 'apologies' after writing he understood Hitler's motives in destroying the Jews

Riverside view of Antwerp, Belgium (photo credit: CC BY-SA 3.0, by Bbd, Wikimedia Commons)

Two Belgian Jewish groups said they would complain to police about a local politician who appeared to justify the Holocaust The Belgian League Against Anti-Semitism, or LBCA, and the Flemish Forum of Jewish Organizations announced their intention to file a complaint for incitement to hatred against Hassan Aarab of the Christian Democratic and Flemish party, or CD&V, on Thursday.

Aarab, a baker from the Antwerp suburb of Deurne who ran on the party's ticket during the May municipal elections, wrote on Facebook earlier this week: "I think the Germans deliberately didn't kill all the Jews so that we will be able to understand now why [Adolf Hitler] was destroying them."

Initially, Aarab defended his statement, saying it was "provocative" and intended as an expression of anger of Israel's actions in Gaza, not as incitement to hate. But he apologized after the leader of the Antwerp chapter of his party, Ariane Van Dooren, condemned him.

"What he wrote is unacceptable and we distance ourselves from it," Van Dooren said. "Hassan simply does not understand the gravity of his words."

Following this and other statements by party leaders, Aarab penned an apology in which he wrote: "I want to offer my apologies for what I said. I seek cooperation and dialogue between different communities. I realize now my statement does not contribute to this, on the contrary."

LBCA President Joel Rubinfeld called on Aarab's party – which is the fourth largest in the federal parliament and largest in the Flemish Region — to remove him from its ranks.

"Hassan Aarab has tarnished the reputation of CD&V," Rubinfeld said. "He was pushed to offer his apologies, which are the result of circumstances."

http://www.timesofisrael.com/belgian-politician-sorry-for-holocaust-comment/#ixzz39xOHaqKM

Sayonara, Sayeeda:

Departure of the Vibrant Baroness

Tobias Langdon on August 9, 2014

Suppose there were a political party in Japan that hated the native Japanese and wanted to do them as much harm as possible. What would it do? Campaign for mass-immigration, of course. But some immigrants would be more harmful than others. Any party that hated the native Japanese would look very favourably on Muslim nations like Pakistan and Bangladesh. Enrichment from those two would be guaranteed to poison political, cultural and economic life in Japan.

But that's entirely hypothetical. There is no malign and treacherous party in Japan and the Japanese haven't been enriched with millions of Pakistanis and Bangladeshis. But the White British have been and the poison is growing more powerful in its effects all the time. The latest example has been the noisy departure of Sayeeda Warsi, Britain's most vibrant Baroness, from the so-called Conservative government:

As a display of cynicism and disloyalty, the timing of Baroness Warsi's resignation from the Government could not have been more calculating. On Monday night, she represented the Government at a moving ceremony at Westminster Abbey to commemorate the start of World War I.

It later transpired — to Downing Street's fury — that the Senior Foreign Office Minister had played this central role in the service having already decided to resign dramatically the following morning. ... Fiercely ambitious, Warsi was incensed when she was overlooked for promotion in last month's botched Government reshuffle, while a string of women saw advancement. Yet promotion was never a possibility. David Cameron actually resisted pressure from senior colleagues to sack Warsi, who, with an extraordinarily inflated view of her own abilities, had vain hopes of succeeding William Hague as Foreign Secretary. ...

The resulting political mess is entirely of Cameron's own making. He promoted Warsi to the Cabinet after the general election to Tory Chairman — traditionally a job for a heavy hitter — not because of her brilliant oratorical skills or shrewd political insights but because of her ethnicity and sex. She is the first Muslim woman to serve in a British Cabinet.

Working class, educated at a comprehensive, and with a broad Yorkshire accent, Warsi ticked all the politically-correct boxes — she was the perfect antidote to Cameron's middle-aged, grey, Eton-educated colleagues. She was the manifestation of the idea that Conservatives were no longer the party of privilege. While a woman of considerable willpower, Warsi — a solicitor who studied law at Leeds University — had neither the experience for the job nor any empathy with Tory members [!].

Compared to the likes of Norman Tebbit, who was Margaret Thatcher's Tory chairman, Warsi was also a political lightweight — and, worse, she had never been elected as an MP [Member of Parliament]. She stood as a candidate in her native Dewsbury, Yorkshire, in 2005, a winnable seat. But while the Tory share of the national vote increased, it fell in Dewsbury and Labour won. Cameron responded by putting her on his so-called A-list to propel women, ethnic minorities and gays into safe seats. She was not even selected so Cameron elevated her to the House of Lords in 2007 as Shadow Minister for Community Cohesion.

It was part of his attempt to reach out to the ethnic vote even though Indians, rather than Pakistanis, are more likely to vote Tory according to recent research. In Cabinet she swiftly became known as the 'Blundering Baroness'. She claimed electoral fraud within the Asian community cost the Tories three seats at the election — but refused to name the seats where the result had been fixed.

She was also forced to deny saying she did not want more Muslim MPs because 'Muslims that go to Parliament don't have any morals or principle'. Her comments in Urdu, made at a private dinner, were misinterpreted, she says. ...

Today, Mr Cameron must regret not sacking Warsi when he could have. And how he must rue backing her so assiduously — once again raising questions about his judgment of people, and women in particular. Westminster was thick with rumour last night that she might defect to Labour and that she has kept a detailed diary. If either report is true, then Baroness Warsi's capacity for embarrassing Cameron still further will increase dramatically. (Baroness blunder: Muslim, working class and northern, she ticked all the boxes. Her tragedy was her ability didn't match her ambition, The Daily Mail, 5th August 2014)

The Labour party will be delighted. The Conservatives followed liberal advice and "reached out" to those vital Muslim voters. Just as liberals intended, it's gone disastrously wrong. Like the Republicans in the US, the Conservatives will continue to be the stupid party and continue the futile chase for ethnic votes. Like the Democrats, Labour will continue to be the evil party, working tirelessly to harm its traditional White supporters. But Labour's "out-reach" to ethnics can backfire too. Sayeeda Warsi represents the vibrancy brought to Britain by Pakistanis. Here's some of the vibrancy brought by Bangladeshis:

'Industrial-scale fraud' in mayor's victory

The extremist-linked mayor of Tower Hamlets, Lutfur Rahman, benefited from "considerable" postal ballot fraud and may also have been helped by "organised fraud in the counting of the votes", according to his Labour Party rival. John Biggs, who was narrowly defeated in May's highly controversial election, said he and party colleagues had seen a number of ballot papers at the count where a vote for him, or candidates supporting him, had been crossed out and a different vote written in. ...

In a separate article for a local newspaper Mr Biggs said: "I remain a good loser, provided it was a good competition. But I am becoming clearer by the day that, remarkably in this mother of democracies, it could ultimately be declared that the election was bent." \dots

In the chaotic count, which took more than five days to return final results for all contests, senior Labour Party sources said that, as well as ballot paper tampering, the way the votes for the mayoralty had been counted was also suspect. Votes for each candidate are normally sorted into bundles of 50, with the tellers then counting the number of bundles to give each candidate's total vote.

However, according to the Labour sources, some of the bundles for Mr Rahman contained only 47 or 48 votes, resulting in him getting more bundles than he deserved. Meanwhile, some bundles for Mr Biggs contained 52 or 53 votes, resulting in him getting fewer bundles than he should have. With around 64,000 first-preference votes cast between the two men, a difference of five or six votes in each bundle may have been enough to affect the result, the sources said. Mr Rahman's majority after second preferences were included was 3,252 votes.

Mr Rahman, who was expelled from Labour in 2010 after The Telegraph exposed his links with an Islamic extremist group, the IFE [Islamic Forum of Europe], won re-election as an independent despite his council being under two separate investigations, one by the Government for alleged misuse of funds and another by the police for fraud. ...

Mr Rahman said that allegations of electoral misconduct were the unfounded claims of "sore losers." ('Industrial-scale fraud' in mayor's victory, The Daily Telegraph, 26th July 2014)

Note how the Labour candidate thought a "bent election" was "remarkable" in Britain, the "mother of democracies." How on earth could such things be happening here? Here's a clue: Britain's malign and treacherous elite allowed immigration by millions of low-IQ non-Whites from corrupt and violent Third World nations like Pakistan and Bangladesh. The consequences weren't difficult to predict. Both the main parties are now reaping some of the fruits of their treachery and malice. I hope that they reap much more.

http://www.theoccidentalobserver.net/2014/08/sayon arasayeedadepartureofthevibrantbaroness/?utm_sourc e=feedburner&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=Fe_ed%3A+theoccidentalobserver%2Ffeed+%28The+Occi_dental+Observer%29

Dutch Jewish group drops far-right politician from petition on anti-Semitism

August 8, 2014 7:00am

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (JTA) — A Dutch Jewish group dropped the politician Geert Wilders from a petition against anti-Semitism.

The Center for Information and Documentation on Israel, or CIDI, had approached Wilders for his signature along with other well-known Dutchmen. But the group dropped Wilders' name when the petition appeared on Thursday as a full-page ad in De Telegraaf daily.

"In the Netherlands, everyone must live safely, also Jews," read the petition.

The petition noted that it was not an "expression of solidarity with Israel's government." Rather, the 86 signatories said: "Criticism on Israel? Okay. Jew-hatred? No way."

CIDI director Esther Voet told the Volkskrant daily that Wilders, the leader of the far-right Party for Freedom, was removed after he criticized a joint declaration earlier this week by Jewish community representatives and Dutch Prime Minister Mark Rutte.

In an open letter this week, Wilders accused Rutte of ignoring "the elephant in the room," adding: "You fear Islam so you will not say what everybody knows: The more Islam grows in the Netherlands, the more anti-Semitism grows."

Released amid an elevated level of anti Semitic incidents coinciding with Israel's actions in Gaza, the Aug. 4 declaration read: "Conflict occurring elsewhere must not lead to tension and conflicts between various groups in the Dutch society." The statement did not mention Israel, but it did praise a Muslim group's call for tolerance.

CIDI wrote in a statement that Wilders' name was removed because his letter "did exactly what concerns the people who made the declaration, namely importing the Middle East conflict" to Holland.

Voet also told Dutch media that 70 percent of anti-Semitic incidents were caused by immigrants, though she did not know their religion.

Wilders lived in Israel for two years and is a staunch supporter of the Jewish state. He is also outspoken in his opposition to Islam and recently caused controversy when he suggested Holland should have "fewer Moroccans."

Federative Jewish Netherlands, a small right-wing Jewish group, criticized CIDI's actions and called on it to apologize to Wilders, whom it thanked for his efforts on behalf of Israel and Dutch Jewry.

http://www.ita.org/2014/08/08/newsopinion/world/dutch-jewish-group-drops-far-right-politician-from-petition-on-anti-semitism

...and now more fraud from a Nobel Peace Laureate, Elie Wiesel...

On 11 August 2014, the Guardian will publish a wildly inaccurate and inflammatory advert from supporters of the state of Israel branding the Palestinian resistance as 'child killers'.

We write to condemn the Guardian's decision to print a wildly inaccurate and inflammatory advert from supporters of the state of Israel branding Palestinians opposing Israel in Gaza as 'child killers'. This is especially sickening when Israel's latest bombardment of Gaza has killed close to 400 Palestinian children. Amnesty International has condemned the deliberate targeting of schools and hospitals by Israel as a war crime.

Among the advert's very many inaccuracies is the claim that those forces opposing Israel do not have the support of Palestinians when the current Israeli offensive is against a united Hamas-Fatah government which commands the support of the majority of Palestinians.

Sadly the decision to print this advert, rejected by The Times newspaper, is another sign of the increasingly pro-Israeli bias of the Guardian's editorial policy, including the gross underestimate of the size of last Saturday's Gaza protest demonstration. You are repeatedly running the slur that those who campaign in support of Palestine are anti-Semitic when the very many Jews in the movement and the movement as a whole have repeatedly made it absolutely clear that this is not the case.

We call on the editor to redress the balance in future coverage.

• John Rees Co-founder, Stop the War Coalition • Lindsey German Convenor, Stop the War Coalition • Sarah Colborne Director, Palestine Solidarity Campaign • Jeremy Corbyn MP• Kate Hudson General Secretary, Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament • David Hearst Middle East Eye • Tariq Ali Writer and broadcaster • Barnaby Raine Organiser of the Jewish Bloc on demonstrations for Gaza.

Also view: Elie Wiesel cons the world - Where is Elie's Tattoo? http://www.eliewieseltattoo.com/

Jews rejected child sacrifice 3,500 years ago. Now it's Hamas' turn.

More than three thousand years ago, Abraham had two children. One son had been sent into the wilderness and was in danger of dying. God saved him with water from a spring.

The other son was bound, his throat about to be cut by his own father. But God stayed the knife. Both sons – Ishmael and Isaac – received promises that they would father great nations.

With these narratives, monotheism and western civilization begin. And the Canaanite practices of child sacrifice to Moloch are forever left behind by the descendants of Abraham.

Except they are not.

In my own lifetime, I have seen Jewish children thrown into the fire. And now I have seen Muslim children used as human shields, in both cases, by worshippers of death cults indistinguishable from that of the Molochites.

I call upon President Obama and the leaders of the world to condemn Hamas' use of children as human shields. What we are suffering through today is not a battle of Jew versus Arab or Israeli versus Palestinian. Rather, it is a battle between those who celebrate life and those who champion death. It is a battle of civilization versus barbarism.

Do the two cultures that brought us the Psalms of David and the rich libraries of the Ottoman Empire not share a love of life, of transmitting wisdom and opportunity to their children? And is any of this discernible in the dark future offered by Hamas to Arab children, to be suicide bombers or human shields for rockets?

Palestinian parents want a hopeful future for their children, just like Israeli parents do. And both should be joining together in peace.

But before sleepless mothers in both Gaza City and Tel Aviv can rest, before diplomats can begin in earnest the crucial business of rebuilding dialogue... the Hamas death cult must be confronted for what it is.

Moderate men and women of faith, whether that faith is in God or man, must shift their criticism from the Israeli soldiers – whose terrible choice is to fire and risk harming human shields, or hold their fire and risk the death of their loved ones – to the terrorists who have taken away all choice from the Palestinian children of Gaza.

I call upon the Palestinian people to find true Muslims to represent them, Muslims who would never voluntarily place a child in danger.

I call upon President Obama and the leaders of the world to condemn Hamas' use of children as human shields.

And I enjoin the American public to stand firmly with the people of Israel who are in yet another struggle for survival, and with the suffering people of Gaza who reject terror and embrace peace.

Let us return child sacrifice to the darkest corner of history, and work towards a brighter future with those who choose life, Arabs and Jews alike, all of us Abraham's children.

Elie Wiesel

This ad was organized and produced by This World: The Values Network, the world's leading organization promoting universal Jewish values in culture, media and politics.

Rabbi Shmuley Boteach, Executive Director www.thisworld.us www.shmuley.com